

during the summer in a Regt of Pennsylvania Cavalry. They are stationed at Camp Pierpont, the sister heard that her brother was sick and with the energetic habit of a true English woman carried the ^{in for} ~~conveyed~~ ^{in for} nine miles out to his camp & back the same day - found him in an almost dying condition and begged that he be sent to her, she was taken shortly after in an ambulance and upon his arrival his condition was found to be most deplorable - he had been attacked ^{several days before} with ordinary fever - and had lain unmoved until the flesh upon all points of the body which rested hard upon whatever was under him had decayed and grown perfectly black and was falling out - his heels had around the same appeared ~~his toes also came away dropping off at the joints~~ his stockings had never been removed during all his illness and his toes were matted and grown together and are now dropping off at the joints ^{the cavities in his feet are absolutely frightful} When intelligent medical attendance was summoned from this city the verdict of residence upon examination was that his extremities were perishing for want of nourishment, he had been neglected until he was literally starving - too little nourishment had been taken into the system during his illness to preserve life or the extremities - This conclusion ~~is~~ seems all the more reliable from the famished appearance which he presents - I am occasionally to see people hungering and seeming from a fever - but I find that hunger and starvation are two distinct conditions - he can lie only on his face with his wrists propped up with hair pillows to prevent his toes from touching the bed (for with the life engendered by food & care, sensation is returning to them) and asks only for "something to eat" food is placed by him at night, and with the earliest dawn of day commences his bowls of broths & soups and a little meat and he eats and begs for "more", and sleeps & eats & begs - three of his toes are to be amputated today.

The surgeon of the Regt comes to see him, but had no idea of his condition, said that the Asst Surgeon was killed and that it
